

CONTRIBUTORS

Pierre GROSSER teaches International History and World Politics at the Centre d'Histoire of Sciences Po, Paris. His research focuses on Cold War history, world history and historiography, and the theory of modern international relations. Among his publications are : Les Temps de la guerre froide. Réflexions sur l'histoire de la guerre froide et les causes de sa fin (Brussels, Complexe, 1995), Pourquoi la Seconde Guerre Mondiale? (Brussels, Complexe, 1999), and most recently 1989, L'année où le monde a basculé (Paris, Perrin, 2009), which won the Ambassadors Prize for 2010. He is currently writing a book on the Indochina War. Projects on how to deal with the “bad guys” in international relations and on the main currents of post-Cold War world politics are in progress.

James G. HERSHBERG is Associate Professor of History and International Affairs at George Washington University, the former director of the Cold War International History Project (CWIHP), and the author of Marigold: The Lost Chance for Peace in Vietnam (Stanford, 2012) from the Woodrow Wilson Center Press and the Stanford University Press. His first book, James B. Conant: Harvard to Hiroshima and the Making of the Nuclear Age (Alfred A. Knopf, 1993; Stanford University Press, 1995) won the Bernath Prize from the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations. He has written numerous scholarly and popular articles on cold war and nuclear history, and his current research centers on the international politics of the 1960s, especially the Cuban Missile Crisis and the Vietnam War.

Akihiro IWASHITA is Professor at the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University. His research interests are Russian foreign policy and Sino-Russian relations. He is the leader of the Global COE Program “Reshaping Japan’s Border Studies” and the chief editor of Eurasia Border Review. He is the author of the book, Hoppo ryodo - 4 demo 0 demo 2 demo naku (Japanese Northern Territorial Issues: Neither Four nor Zero, nor Two, Tokyo:Chuokoron-shinsha, 2005), awarded the Osaragi Jiro Prize in 2006. He has also published many works on the Sino-Russian border solution.

Lorenz M. LÜTHI is Associate Professor of History at McGill University, Canada. His research focuses on the Cold War as a superpower conflict; regional Cold Wars in East Asia, the Middle East, and Europe; international relations around the socialist world (Soviet Union, China, Vietnam); and U.S. Foreign Relations. He is the author of the book, The Sino-Soviet Split, 1956-1966: Cold War in the Communist World. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 2008. (winner of the 2008 Furniss Award; winner of the 2010 Marshall Shulman Book Prize; to be translated into Chinese, German, and Polish).

Haruka MATSUMOTO is Research Fellow at the Institute of Developing Economies (IDE-JETRO). Her fields of research include diplomatic history during the Cold War, current Chinese foreign policy and China-Taiwan relations. She has recently completed two years of research at Academia Sinica in Taiwan and at the School of International Studies, Beijing University. She has published various articles on Chinese foreign policy, including “The Resumption of Cross-Strait Talks and the Future of a Peace Agreement” (in Japanese), Chugoku 21, Vol. 36 (March 2012); “China’s Multilateral Diplomacy after the Cold War,” in Norihiro Sasaki, ed., Political Stability of Contemporary China (in Japanese) (Tokyo: IDE-JETRO, 2009); “The 1954-55 Taiwan Strait Crisis and U.S.-R.O.C. Mutual Defense Treaty” (in Japanese), Kokusai Seiji, Vol. 118 (May 1998).

Sergey RADCHENKO is Lecturer at the University of Nottingham, Ningbo, China. His academic interests focus on contemporary Asian history, Sino-Russian and Russian-Japanese relations, and on Mongolia. He also writes on the Cold War. He has authored or edited a number of books and articles on the above subjects, in particular, Two Suns in the Heavens (Stanford, 2009). He is currently completing a monograph tentatively titled Half a Leap Across an Abyss: How Russia Lost Asia, and the Cold War (Oxford, 2013).

Dmitri S. RYABUSHKIN is Professor at the Tavrida National University in Ukraine. He is the author of Myths of Damanskii (Mify Damanskogo) (Moscow: Tranzitkniga, 2004). He is presently working on a next volume that gathers together eyewitness accounts of the Damanskii conflict under the tentative title Vospominaniia o Damanskom. (forthcoming)

Sören URBANSKY is Research Associate and Lecturer (Wissenschaftlicher Mitarbeiter) of East Asian History at the University of Freiburg, Germany. He is the author of the book, Kolonialer Wettstreit. Russland, China, Japan und die Ostchinesische Eisenbahn [Colonial Competition: Russia, China, Japan and the Chinese Eastern Railway] (Globalgeschichte, vol. 4), Frankfurt/New York: Campus, 2008. He has also written the article, “The Unfathomable Foe. Constructing the Enemy in the Sino-Soviet borderlands during the Brezhnev Era, 1964–1982”, in Journal of Modern European History, 2012 .

David WOLFF teaches at the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University and is former director of the Cold War International History Project at the Woodrow Wilson Center. His fields of specialization are Russian, Soviet and Cold War history, in particular, Russia pointed East. He is the author of To the Harbin Station: The Liberal Alternative in Russian Manchuria, 1898-1914 (Stanford, 1999) and the coauthor of Le KGB et les pays baltes, 1939-1991 (Belin, 2005, with Gael Moullec). He is also a coeditor of the two-volume, The Russo-Japanese War in Global Perspective: World War Zero (Brill, 2005; 2007). He is now completing Stalin’s Eurasian Foreign Policy, 1944-1953 and organizing two volumes, on Siberia and the Far East, for the Russia’s Great War and Revolution series, forthcoming from Slavica.